Lisbon, September 25. N. S. Several concurring Advices from Spain, ſay, That Mareſchal Staremberg, ſince his Paſſage over the Segre, has obtained a very great Advantage over the Enemy; that he is advanced with his Army to Fraga, and the Enemies are retired to Saragoſſa. The Duke of Anjou ſet out Poſt from Madrid on the ſecond Inſtant, in order to take upon him the Command of the Army. The Portugueze Priſoners taken at the Battel of Almanza are marching home through Spain, the Enemy having choſen to return them without Exchange, rather than be at the Charge of allowing them Bread, during the great Scarcity of that Commodity throughout their Dominions. The Enemies have yet made no Motion on this Frontier, the Arrival of Major-General Stanhope at Gibraltar having ſuſpended all their Meaſures; 'tis reported that the Marquis de Bay is making a conſiderable Detachment to reinforce the Duke of Anjou in Arragon.

Bruſſels, September 23. N. S. We have no particular Account of the Loſs of the Enemy in the late Battel near Mons, but there are ſome Liſts taken of the killed and wounded of the General Officers; by which it appears, that Monſieur de Courcillon, Monſieur de Chemerault, the Count de Breuil, the Marquiſs de Coaſquin, de Stakenberg, de Lautrecq, de Gresberges, de Moret, de Sheldon; Meſſieurs Bouleau, Rochebonne and Tournefort, the Duke de St. Agnan, de Chaveſtain, de Salis and de Seignelay; the Chevalier de Croy, de Teligonde, de Molezun, and Meſſieurs Fitzgerard, Barentin and St. Laurent, and the Duke de Charoſt are kill'd. The Mareſchal Villars, the Mareſchal Bouffliers; the Chevalier de Conflans, de Beaufremont, de Savigne, de Crauſat, de Mornefiro, de Opede, de Refuge; the Duke de Guiche, d'Albergotti; the Prince de Lambeſc, de Monbaſon, de Brilhac, de Tournemine, de Renty, de Berville, de Autel, and de St. Hilarie, are wounded. The laſt Letters from Spain adviſe, that Cardinal Portocarrero had lately had a Fit of Sickneſs, followed by two Relapſes, which had reduced him to ſuch a dangerous Condition, that his Recovery has been deſpaired of.
